The Group's new commitment to making culture available to all

Turin, 22 October 2013 – After the success of the exhibitions on Pablo Picasso and Salvador Dalí in Milan in 2012 and 2010 respectively, the Unipol Group is strengthening its commitment to art by sponsoring another major exhibition, which from 23 September 2013 to 22 February 2014 is bringing the works of one of the main exponents of Impressionism to Turin.

Unipol's partnership with the Municipality of Turin and the Turin Museums Foundation – GAM reaffirms the company's wish to provide concrete support for those working in Italy by making culture available to the general public, and forms part of the commitment to social responsibility that has symbolized the history of the Group for fifty years.

When Unipol thinks about people's future it also thinks about what they like. Therefore the Group's sponsorship programme embraces culture, the environment and sport, based on the belief that running a business is not incompatible with a commitment to people and the community.
